No Survey No Password No DRM No Watermark No P2P Full Version A newly updated web application to forecast the U.S. electricity market, where it is the largest user of energy, will run on a fast electric grid powered by 100 percent renewable energy. The U.S. Department of Energy's Energy Reliability Organization will host a webinar at noon PT/1 p.m. ET on the new web application, called Energy Reliability Portal, on Tuesday, Nov. 25. Energy Reliability Portal is designed to help electric utilities, energy service companies, researchers, policy makers and investors more easily access the latest information on the reliability and resilience of the U.S. electric system. The portal uses the latest research and data from the Interagency Working Group on the High Performance of the U.S. Electric Grid. NREL, through its Energy Reliability and Incentives Program, developed the system for the Energy Reliability Organization. "The development of Energy Reliability Portal is a collaboration with our customers, stakeholders, working groups, and members of the research community," said Brad S. Newcomb, acting deputy director for the Energy Reliability Organization. "It is designed to ensure the reliability of our electric power system while providing transparency to citizens, policy makers, investors, and the industry." To access Energy Reliability Portal, users must register. During registration, they will receive a username and password. To access the portal, the information entered in the registration form will be used to generate the username. The portal can be accessed at the URL NREL will provide technical assistance and answer questions during the webinar, and the Energy Reliability Organization will host a social media session.

Q: objective c, how to compare two NSStrings for equality ok, so I have two NSStrings like this: NSString * str1 = @"firstValue"; NSString * str2 = @"SecondValue"; Now I want to compare both these strings like if([str1 isEqualToString:str2]) { NSLog(@"=== str1 equals str2"); } I want that output to be printed and it to only happen once. It's been two weeks since the sheriff's department announced that they would be reopening the case. When the victim filed the report, he was quoted in the press saying that he had not identified the aggressor. When he saw the picture of Sam Montgomery, it was like a light bulb went off. He began to tell the investigators about it. He told the officer that he was pretty certain that Montgomery had been involved. They arrested Montgomery when he came back from work. It made the news because he had posted bail, and it took that long for him to be able to post bail. The police had interviewed him already, and they were waiting for the DNA results to make a formal charge. He's currently waiting for arraignment. In the meantime, the reports that said that they had identified him have been deleted from the website. The news station doesn't have his picture anymore. They've sent the family photo of Sam and the new sheriff's department head, and it looks like a nervous, small animal. MOSCOW -- A video has emerged showing a woman interviewing Vladimir Putin at an election rally in November 2010. The video, broadcast by the Itogi channel in Russia, has Putin denying allegations that money has been secretly transferred out of state-controlled Bank VTB to Russian opposition politician Vladimir Ryzhkov. The channel said the video was obtained by a member of Putin's campaign team, Georgiy Tigranov. Get Breaking News Delivered to Your Inbox "Money hasn't been transferred," Putin says in the video. "If that's a secret meeting that you and Ryzhkov were at, you're not supposed to be doing such things in public." In the end, the woman presses Putin on the allegation, and he remains adamant in his denial. The woman in the video says to him: "Is it true that a lot of money has been transferred secretly, to Ryzhkov?" Putin replies, "Who told you that?" In a statement Tuesday, Putin's spokesman Dmitry Peskov said the video had been put out "as part of a neo-Soviet campaign."
